In his first interview since his loss, Mayweather says he was "clever" LAS VEGAS -- Floyd Mayweather Jr. appeared to have the fight of his life last Saturday night when he crushed Marcos Maidana with a right hand on the way to a unanimous decision in a bout at MGM Grand. After conceding his title to Manny Pacquiao in January, Mayweather has had to wait and see if he can win back his diamond belt. Mayweather's thirst for victory is nearly as big as his bank account. That's the only reason it took him this long to hire trainer Robert Garcia and begin working with the trainer before the post-fight press conference. He wants that belt as badly as he did three and a half years ago, when he bested Shane Mosley in the 'Fight of the Year' at the MGM Grand. Mayweather sat down with TMZ cameras for his first interview since the bout. He's invited to return to the site at various points throughout the year as he hopes to make a run at defending his title again. "Man, you know, this is a very talented, great fighter. He's a very experienced fighter. I'm very impressed by that. I think I did a very good job tonight. I do. I think I was clever. And I was more clever than he was. But that's how it goes. He is very slick, intelligent fighter." Mayweather continues to make the case that he's a more skilled fighter than Pacquiao. In his corner before the bout, the 40-year-old said he was training for a big fight against anyone other than Pacquiao. But he still had to fight Pacquiao, the man who beat him in his last two bouts. "It was a big shock. I was kind of preparing for a fight with anyone other than Manny." Mayweather's comments on Pacquiao's 2006 upset over Oscar De La Hoya have been well-documented. But Mayweather says it was Pacquiao's infamous trash-talk that fueled the fire. "I think we gave Oscar too much credit because he had nothing to do with it. He told his team that he would have beaten me, and he told his team that I was going to get killed tonight. We laughed about it. And that's what I think fueled the fire a little bit, his team saying that I was going to get killed. And he was right, but I didn

Q: Correct way to use "in the" in a sentence I would like to know what the correct way to use "in the" in a sentence. I am trying to create some sentences with "In the" and "In order to", but would like to ensure I have used the sentence correctly. I suspect that there were at least two major British intelligence services, known as MI5 and MI6. (Is this correct?) I suspect that there were at least two major British intelligence services, known as MI5 and MI6. In order to prevent further British intelligence-based spying on Soviet civilian sites, the British Government decided to ban all of these activities. I suspect that there were at least two major British intelligence services, known as MI5 and MI6. In the attempt to prevent further British intelligence-based spying on Soviet civilian sites, the British Government decided to ban all of these activities. I would like to know whether I have used the correct in the and in order to. A: You can use any of them. There is no difference in meaning (with the exception that the third has a stronger emphasis than the second). There is a difference in tone; each has a different effect. In the: I suspect that there were at least two major British intelligence services, known as MI5 and MI6. (Is this correct?) conveys that the speaker is certain that at least two intelligence services were concerned with spying. I'm not saying that I think that's true (in fact, I have no idea) but just that, in this context, it suggests that the speaker thinks that MI5 and MI6 were the major intel agencies. You can also use "as". I suspect that there were at least two major British intelligence services, known as MI5 and MI6. As far as I know... That conveys more doubt than certainty. I think it's generally better to talk in general terms. In order to: I suspect that there were at least two major British intelligence services, known as MI5 and MI6. conveys that you are using the idea of MI5 and MI6 as a rhetorical device to make your next point more emphatic. If you want to go a step further than that, you can use "by." I suspect that there were at least two major British intelligence services, known as MI5 and
